

Hundred Year Flood

After the rain everything was quiet like the water swallowed up the sound and spit out silence.

As if the rushing waters had smothered everything in its path sucking the lifeblood out of everything it touched - and taking with it the voice of a city.